

The Short Eclipse and a Longer Period of Darkness.

Bill Crane, Executive Director

I started this article on Solar Eclipse Day 2024. That eclipse lasted up to seven and a half minutes. We are entering another period of darkness that will last about six months.

The election season is upon us. It's hard to ignore the noise. Negative ads flood our screens, debates turn heated, and social media becomes a battleground of opinions. Lies are presented as truths. Yards will be cluttered with signs that will soon add to a landfill. But fear not! We can rise above the negativity and find solace in brighter moments. Here's how:

Start by acknowledging the storm. It's okay to feel overwhelmed. The election cycle can be draining, especially when it feels like the world is divided into factions, friends and families divided by candidates. Recognize the storm, but don't let it consume you. Take breaks from news updates, step away from heated discussions, and breathe. Remember that you're not alone, most everyone is experiencing this.

Amidst this chaos, Montana's summer beckons. Picture yourself hiking along beautiful trails, the scent of pine in the air, and the sun on your skin. Nature doesn't care about political affiliations; it simply exists. Let's follow suit. Whether it's a lazy afternoon by the river or a starlit campfire, let Montana's beauty remind us of life beyond the ballot box.

While politicians spar, nonprofits quietly work miracles. These unsung heroes tackle issues that transcend party lines. Consider supporting local nonprofits—whether it's a food bank, an environmental group, animal shelter, art group, cancer support, or cultural nonprofit. Their impact is tangible, and volunteering your time can be a beacon of hope. Imagine people's faces when they receive a much needed food or the joy of planting trees to protect our planet.

Go a little further with Random Acts of Kindness. In a world where negativity thrives, kindness is revolutionary. Hold the door for a stranger, smile at the grocery cashier, or leave an uplifting note on someone's windshield. These small acts ripple outward, creating pockets of positivity. Let's be the change we wish to see. Even small gestures matter—a genuine compliment, a shared laugh, or a heartfelt thank-you. Wait, wait, wait. DO THIS ALL THE YEAR!

Practice community over division. Remember, we're all in this together. Our neighbors, regardless of their political leanings, share the same sunsets and breathe the same air. Instead of dwelling on differences, let's celebrate our common ground. Attend a community event, join a local club, or organize a neighborhood cleanup. When we come together, we're stronger, more resilient, and better equipped to weather any storm.

VOTE. In no way am I recommending checking out. Yes, elections can be messy, but they're also our chance to shape the future. Exercise your right to vote. Research candidates, understand their policies, and cast your ballot. It's a privilege denied to many in our past and in the world today, and it's how we steer the ship toward calmer waters. Remember that every vote counts, and collectively, we create the course of history.

As the election drama unfolds, hold onto hope. Hope that leaders will emerge who prioritize unity over discord. Hope that, despite the noise, we can build a better tomorrow. Hope is our compass, guiding us through uncertainty. It's the light that pierces through the darkest clouds.

So, tear off that election anxiety like a calendar page. Let the sun warm your face, lend a hand to those in need, and remember that positivity is a superpower. Together, we'll weather yet another political storm and emerge stronger. Let's be the rays of sunshine that pierce through the political fog.

Stay hopeful, Montana!
